

Black-capped Widow
Araneus Atricapillus
The Oddubon Collection

Vigorous as well as agile on her eight legs, the Black-capped Widow makes her way from limb to limb in search of a morsel or an interesting vantage point.

Pausing to gaze with introspection, the Widow seems to see and hear all movement. Oddubon himself called her “a fearsome yet captivating spirit,” as she combines “the lovely grace of arachnid” with the “energetic, fun-loving nature of the bird world which she also inhabits.”

©Howard Dale
ART & ILLUSTRATION
HowardDale.com