

Gossiping House Wren
Janus Troglodyte
The Oddubon Collection

This generally amiable and frequently loquacious wren makes its business the happenstances of its fellow birds, using its considerable skill at doublespeak, as well as its advantageous duplicate vocal apparatus to regale the neighborhood with news. Small yet muscular, the Janus Troglodyte flitters from pole to petal all the while with its quadruple eyes wide and speaking out of both sides of both mouths. Oddubon called these creatures “the communicators of the backyard glens.”

Howard Dale
ART & ILLUSTRATION
HowardDale.com